Winslow Today: Downtown Renaissance and Tourism

Tourist attractions are vital to Winslow’s economic and cultural life. Residents and visitors alike enjoy local historic sites, artist galleries, and annual events, as well as outdoor recreation at Homolovi State Park and McHood Park at Clear Creek. Winslow is also an excellent base for exploring nearby Meteor Crater, Hopi and Navajo lands, and the Petrified Forest/Painted Desert National Monument.

Historic Route 66

Congestion, safety, and national defense concerns prompted the creation of the interstate highway system through the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1956. Interstate 40 bypassed Winslow in October 1979, and downtown traffic disappeared overnight. Over time, more and more travelers pulled off the interstate to explore small towns and experience the charm and authenticity of a bygone era. Old Route 66 received a historic highway designation in 1987, and Winslow’s section of “Historic Route 66,” now constantly flowing with tourists, is the foundation of downtown revitalization.

La Posada Hotel and Gardens

With the popularity of automobiles, passengers rail travel began its decline and the Fred Harvey company began closing restaurants and hotels in the 1930s. World War II temporarily reversed this trend, and La Posada’s Harvey Girls served soldiers riding through town on troop trains. Even though autos flooded Route 66 after the war, tourism sought more modest accommodations. La Posada closed to the public in 1957, but escaped the wrecking ball when La Posada became an endangered property again in 1995 once the BNSF planned to move division headquarters to Belen, New Mexico, some dedicated residents laid the groundwork to save it. Residents and visitors alike enjoy annual events along Historic Route 66 including a Mid-Summer’s Day in Winslow (August), the Standin’ on the Corner Festival (September), the Jut Cruz’s Car Club Show (October), and the Winslow Christmas Parade (December). The former Hubbell Trading Post reopened as the Winslow Visitor’s Center/Chamber of Commerce in 2009 with many of the original historic elements on view. The Chamber staff promote area attractions and host annual events including Winslow’s Fourth of July Fireworks, Christmas Parade, and Festival of Trees (December).

The Winslow City Council had already listed the building on the National Register of Historic Places in 1992. Local volunteers called the Gardening Angels began tending the grounds, and the La Posada Foundation garnered federal grant funds as seed money. Then in 1997, Allan Affeldt and his wife, artist Tina Mion, purchased and renovated La Posada as a premier hotel and gardens, true to the vision of Mary Colter. The hotel now hosts thousands of visitors annually, including residents who attend special programs or enjoy meals at Chef John Sharpe’s Turquoise Room. Winslow’s Christmas Parade, a reminder of its history, puts on a grand display. The parade kicks off the holiday season the Saturday before Thanksgiving. Hundreds of neighboring Hopi and Navajo vendors set up jewelry, craft, and food booths along Historic Route 66 before the parade. They also participate in the parade itself, like the Navajo princess and prince on a float at right.

The Winslow Christmas Parade

The Winslow Christmas Parade is one of the oldest and largest of its kind in Arizona. Winslow’s Retail Trade Committee founded the parade in 1946 to encourage residents to do their holiday shopping locally. The parade has featured dance teams and equestrian units, Shriner clowns and motor patrols, the Winslow High and Santa Fe Indian Bands, Native American chapter house and school floats, and Santa Claus himself, seen at left in the 1960s. Now a project of the Winslow Chamber, the parade kicks off the holiday season the Saturday before Thanksgiving. Hundreds of neighboring Hopi and Navajo vendors set up jewelry, craft, and food booths along Historic Route 66 before the parade. They also participate in the parade itself, like the Navajo princess and prince on a float at right.
